

How To Use This Site

BJA Executive Session on Police Leadership lays out a vision of the future and an innovative approach to creating leaders who can build and guide that future. It is a self-development site for individuals and agencies and a resource site for academics, educators and students, police executives and supervisors, and municipal and community groups who work and serve with police.

For everyone, this walk-through guide helps orient you before you begin to explore the site's wide ranging offerings:

1. The welcome video, home page. A quick, essential overview of our multi-year, multi-discipline project. Then, following the video, listen to brief narrated audio comments on the project's impact.

2. The Story, home page menu bar. The future as we see it is captured in three set-up pages.

- World of the Future. How economic, societal and institutional changes will drive changes in policing.
- Organization of the Future. How policing will move toward an increasingly integrated model of municipal- and community-based, co-produced public service.
- Leader of the Future. How the world and organization of the future will demand a new concept of leadership and a new model for developing police leaders, a model based on 21st century methods and empirically driven evidence of how leaders develop.

3. The Products, accordion right side menus. Products are organized under World, Organization and Leader of the Future. There is substantial material in a range of formats—short papers, long papers, videos, discussion tools, cases, dialogues... In addition to core pieces on organization and leaders of the future, there are specialty pieces such as:
